

ASEAN DEFENCE SECURITY IN THE NEXT TWO DECADES

AGENDA

Introduction

Factors influence Southeast Asian
Defence and Security

Southeast Asian Defence and Security in the Next Two Decades

Conclusion

INTRODUCTION

Factors influence Southeast Asian defence and security

Increasingly acute strategic competition between major powers

- The Indo-Asia-Pacific region has become a focal point for global attention, which reflects intertwined interests and strategic competition between major powers.

Geopolitical shifts in the region

- The U.S. Free and Open Indo-Pacific Strategy is looming more clearly, which mirrors not only the strategic competition between major powers but also an inevitable trend in the increasingly deep and wide integration process.

Multilateralism and multilateral institutions are facing a number of challenges

- Pragmatic nationalism and power politics focusing on power continue to proliferate and rule over international relations.

Nontraditional security issues continue to envision complex developments

- Nontraditional security issues remain huge challenges to global and regional security and exceed any single nation's capacity to address.

Southeast Asian defence and security in the next 2 decades

The risk of collision, confrontation, and armed race.

ASEAN's centrality.

Maritime security.

Nontraditional security issues.

CONCLUSION